

Meet Namibian Agribusiness Powerhouse

Selma Nasheya is based in Namibia, an Alumni of Stellenbosch University and University of Namibia and currently an MBA Student in Sustainable Development and Management with Nalanda University in India. She is an aspiring entrepreneur and farmer. She founded Mehafo Sustainable Solutions (MSS) in 2018 and it is registered in Windhoek, Namibia and Luanda, Angola. Selma has a keen passion to transform Africa's agribusiness sector through strategic facilitation. Starting in Namibia and Southern Africa, her vision is to improve Africa's agro-production and processing abilities to reach international standards. Her focus is on employing social innovative strategies to support the sustainable empowerment of African women and youth startup ecosystems to raise disposable income of women led households. She believes women are sources of power and incubators of social transformation.

Her newly founded social enterprise aims to be the leading investment facilitation agency in unlocking capacity needs and leveraging large scale investments in up scaling Africa's agribusiness and renewable energy potential through strategic collective impact. The company's mission is to build strong resourceful networks, connect, engage and support local women and aspiring female entrepreneurs to realize their potential through establishing meaningful business connections and facilitating sustainable investment linkages.
